

CONDEMNED TO DIE AS SPY, HE WEDS GIRL WHO SAVED HIM

H. C. S. Heynemann and his bride who saved him from death as a spy.

San Francisco, Cal.—Thrice arrested as a spy and twice condemned to death, then rescued by a girl whom he marries afterward are the thrilling adventures of H. C. S. Heynemann, architect to this city.

"I was in Tarascon, a little town in France, when the present European war broke out," said Heynemann. "After the war begun supplies of food ran very low in this village and for three days I had had nothing to eat. I saw some pears hanging in a tree near a railroad station and climbed up to get some of the fruit. A squad of soldiers discovered me, ordered me down, court-martialed me and ordered me shot on the spot. Fortunately as the firing squad was forming an officer of higher rank came along and examined my papers, whereupon I was set free.

"Later I was arrested in Germany as a British spy but managed to con-
